Las Vegas — Tibi Ellis, a longtime Las Vegas resident, announced her candidacy for the Nevada State Assembly earlier today.

“I’ve grown increasingly frustrated and alarmed at politicians putting more and more of the financial burden on Nevada’s families and small businesses” said Ellis.

“Nevada’s small businesses and entrepreneurs are the economic engine of the state and yet they are being asked to carry more and more of the tax burden. Raising taxes on those that create jobs is no way to fix an economic downturn. Billion dollar tax increases are not going to bring jobs back to Nevada.”

A twenty-five year healthcare professional who has also spent many years assisting companies in becoming more efficient, Ms. Ellis plans on bringing her unique perspective and experience to state government. She currently operates her own home care company which assists the elderly, disabled and infirm with care in their own homes and her years working with those in need and pain have helped shaped her for the challenges Nevada faces today.

“I will work to help those in the district who need assistance during this difficult economic period and to minimize the additional economic infractions that they may face before a rebound comes to Nevada” Ellis concluded.

Ms. Ellis immigrated to the United States from Venezuela as a young teenager. In addition to running her business, Tibi Ellis is currently chairman of the Nevada Republican National Hispanic Assembly, immediate past chair of Latinas in Politics, and is a member of the Latin Chamber of Commerce. Ellis and her husband have lived in Nevada for nearly 10 years. She is a mother of five and a grandmother of two. Tibi Ellis is running as a Republican.
